|  |       | TOPIC: Preparing for Awards, Summer Research and InternshipsDescription: Students in this course will learn about and prepare materials for nationally-competitive opportunities for summer 2022 (e.g. summer research programs and institutes, internships). Students will learn how to find opportunities; the basic tenets of research; the importance of good writing and editing; and how work is changing. By the end of the course, students will have prepared materials (including a statement) for the opportunities they have identified. The course will also include a historical survey and analysis of the awards and the respective funding agencies.Above class meets January 3 - January 7Above class meets 100% Online through Synchronous instruction. |                   | TOPIC: Ethics and Morality in Public AffairsDescription: This course will examine the normative concerns that drive politics and public policy. These concerns tend to fall under the heading of "morals", which are difficult to measure and therefore given short shrift by social scientists. Recent investigations, however, suggest that the normative motivations driving human behavior and policy are well within the realm of empirical research and, far from being metaphysical, are entirely natural and open to scientific scrutiny. (But don't fret! There remains ample room for mystical, transcendental, and metaphysical approaches to these questions.) Special attention will be paid to two key concepts: justice and deservingness. Readings, lectures, and discussions will draw on---and expose the overlap of---moral philosophy, institutional economics, public opinion, and post-positivist policy research.Above class meets with SPEA-V 550Above class meets January 3 - January 7Above class meets 100% Online through Synchronous instruction. |   |      | Description: This course will examine the normative concerns that drive politics and public policy. These concerns tend to fall under the heading of "morals", which are difficult to measure and therefore given short shrift by social scientists. Recent investigations, however, suggest that the normative motivations driving human behavior and policy are well within the realm of empirical research and, far from being metaphysical, are entirely natural and open to scientific scrutiny. (But don't fret! There remains ample room for mystical, transcendental, and metaphysical approaches to these questions.) Special attention will be paid to two key concepts: justice and deservingness. Readings, lectures, and discussions will draw on---and expose the overlap of---moral philosophy, institutional economics, public opinion, and post-positivist policy research. |                 |         |             |         |     |     |     |
